Oxford Women in Politics

TERM CARD

ABOUT THE SOCIETY

Oxford Women in Politics (OxWip) is a diverse, vibrant society established with the aim of tackling the gender disparity evident in political organisations within Oxford and beyond. The society aims to enable and inspire women to become the leaders of the future, whatever their chosen field.

The society runs a number of programmes to help members achieve their full potential. Conferences and speaker events offer the chance to gain inspiration from influential women. In recent years, we have hosted speakers such as the shadow minister for women, Theresa May and Dolly Jones, the editor of Vogue.com. The society runs a mentoring scheme with mentors from the University, business and politics. It also hosts a number of skills sessions and popular social events.
